

Changes in social awareness
on both sides of the border
Poland – the Czech Republic
Sociological reflections

NR 3036

Changes in social awareness
on both sides of the border
Poland – the Czech Republic
Sociological reflections

Edited by
URSZULA SWADŹBA, DANIEL TOPINKA

Wydawnictwo Uniwersytetu Śląskiego

Katowice 2013

Editor of the Series: Socjologia
WOJCIECH ŚWIĄTKIEWICZ

Referee
ROBERT GEISLER

When sold out, the publication will be available online at:

The Silesian Digital Library
www.sbc.org.pl

Executive Editor: KRYSZTOF WOJCIŚ

Technical Editor and Cover Designer: MAŁGORZATA PLEŚNIAR

Proofreader: DANUTA STENCEL

Typesetter: GRAŻYNA SZEWCZYK

Copyright © 2013 by
Wydawnictwo Uniwersytetu Śląskiego
All rights reserved

ISSN 0208-6336
ISBN 978-83-226-2102-8

Published by
Wydawnictwo Uniwersytetu Śląskiego
ul. Bankowa 12B, 40-007 Katowice
www.wydawnictwo.us.edu.pl
e-mail: wydawus@us.edu.pl

First impression. Printed sheets. 13.75. Publishing sheets. 19.5.
Offset paper grade III, 90 g Price 28 zł (+ VAT)

Printing and binding: PPHU TOTEM s.c.,
M. Rejnowski, J. Zamiara, ul. Jacewska 89, 88-100 Inowrocław

Contents

Introduction (Urszula Swadźba, Daniel Topinka)	7
ANDRZEJ GÓRNY
From church religiousness to spirituality. The transformation of religion in the early 21st century	11
URSZULA SWADŹBA
Ethnic identification as a part of the Silesians' identity	27
ADAM BARTOSZEK
Ethno-regional diversity in Upper Silesia vs the historical memory of school children	47
MONIKA ŹAK
Silesian family – yesterday and today	70
KINGA HOFFMANN
Work in young Silesian women's value-system	84
DUŠAN LUŽNÝ
Religion in Czech Silesia: An attempt to explain Czech irreligiosity	104
JAN VÁNĚ
The influence of the Catholic Church in the border regions: Comparing Silesia and Western Bohemia	125
JAN KALENDA
State formation on periphery: Precarious state building in Silesia	151
DANIEL TOPINKA
Ethno-national paradox: The case of Hlučín area	173
HELENA KUBÁTOVÁ
Changing life situations of Silesians in Hlučín region	195
Notes about Contributors	217

Introduction

Poles and Czechs have been neighbours for centuries. We both speak Western Slavic languages and share similar Slavic origins. Moreover, history often condemned us to a common fate, such as the submission of Bohemia, Moravia, and also a part of Silesia, to the Habsburg Monarchy. The both nation states have much in common as well as differ in many respects. They underwent modernization, nationalization, experienced the period of socialism, and finally found themselves in a whirlwind of globalization and a new social reality.

Common membership in the Communist Bloc, and then the systemic transformation, maintained the analogous fates of the both nations, which are imprinted on the consciousness of their societies. At the same time, historical differences also occurred, such as between the accomplishments of Jan Hus and the Counter-Reformation in Poland. The result is different approaches of Poles and Czechs to religion.

The period of systemic transformation, opening to the outside world and the processes of globalization have caused an influx of new trends, styles and the Western values. It concerns the inhabitants of the both countries, especially the younger generation. The period in question allowed them to explore their identity, particularly in terms of ethnicity and religion. Such processes occurred in both the Polish and the Czech communities.

Socio-economic transformation in the last two decades accounts for a major change in lifestyle. For sociologists, a social change is a major challenge which gives the opportunity to monitor many aspects of society. What is particularly interesting is observing changes in border areas.

The aim of this publication is to present the changes in public awareness on both sides of the border (in Silesia and Moravia), as the similarities and differences are more apparent there. These changes relate primarily to the younger generation, but also to the generation of “real socialism”, and they are reflected not only in economic terms but also in social dimensions, e.g. in family and religion, as well as in ethnic and environmental awareness. Until now, economists have written many books on social and cultural issues, but there are no books by sociologists. The monograph will therefore contribute to the description and analysis of changes in awareness of the Polish-Czech borderlands. It will be pointed out how the economic changes that occurred during the systemic transformation are reflected in the social changes and how this affects the consciousness and behaviour of residents of the borderlands.

This book comprises the articles written by the researchers of the Institute of Sociology, University of Silesia in Katowice and the researchers of the Department of Sociology, Palacký University in Olomouc. The book is divided into two parts showing the changes in the awareness of people living on either side of the Polish-Czech border.

The Polish part of the collection opens with a text by Andrzej Górny: “From church religiousness to spirituality. The transformation of religion in the early 21st century”. The author’s analysis of the results of studies on religiosity represents a unique application of significant transformations in the prevailing attitudes to religion which have occurred and still occur in modern societies. Traditional churches are no longer monopolistic institutions in determining what is religious. There is a peculiar accent shift – from institutions to individuals. More and more people define their spirituality individually. The paper is an attempt to reflect on the directions of a general and specific transformation of attitudes towards religion possible to identify in the contemporary society of Silesia.

Urszula Swadźba in her paper “Ethnic identification as a part of the Silesians’ identity” addresses the problem of changes of ethnic identifications of Silesians. First, a theoretical context of the considerations is presented, along with the concept of identity and national (ethnic) identity. Then, based on the work of historical and sociological developments, the sources of formation of ethnic peculiarity among Silesians are presented. Finally, on the basis of her own research carried out in three selected Silesian communities, the author shows the current shape of identification and the link with Silesian affiliation. In the conclusions, the dynamic nature of this phenomenon is indicated. In a unified society there is a rebirth of Silesian identity and ethnic identity.

Adam Bartoszek in an article “Ethno-regional diversity in Upper Silesia vs the historical memory of school children” attempts to answer the main research question: What factors shape the identity of the young generation of Silesians and what their sense of cultural rootedness is? This question is linked to the idea of changes in the socio-cultural habitus among the inhabitants of the Upper Silesia. The problem is presented on the basis of the theory of cultural capital and is designed to recognize changes in the formation of ethnic habitus of Silesians. Conclusions are drawn on the basis of research conducted on the generation of school-attending children and youth that inherits its identity from their parents, and subsequently modifies it during the interaction with a peer group.

Monika Žak in her text “Silesian family – yesterday and today” undertakes the problem of changes that can be observed in Silesian families: yesterday and today. The Silesian family of yesterday was an extended family, bonded together by very strong emotional and economical ties. Tradition and the cultivation of patterns operating in the life of successive generations in a significant order in the daily lives of each of the Silesian family. Today’s Silesian family is often a nuclear family that cultivates the tradition only on occasions of various festivals and cultural events. The author, based on research conducted by other sociologists and her own research, analyses these changes.

Kinga Hoffmann in a paper “Work in young Silesian women’s value-system” stresses the value of work for Silesians. Nevertheless, women are facing a problem of keeping the balance between the work and the private life. The author describes the topic on the basis of her own research conducted in selected Silesian towns. Presented results show work as a specific area of women’s activity. Therefore, the author emphasizes this aspect of changes in the area and its consequences.

The second part of the book contains the articles by Czech scholars/researchers. They relate to issues, similar to their Polish counterparts.

Dušan Lužný in his paper “Religion in Czech Silesia: An attempt to explain Czech irreligiosity” aims to identify the characteristics of religious life in the Czech part of Silesia in comparison to the situation in the entire Czech Republic. Some parts of this region rank among the most religious parts of the otherwise highly secularized Czech society. The question this paper tries to answer (or at least indicate a possible answer to) is: what are the factors which lead to the maintenance and continued religious reproduction. The key concept for answering this research question is the concept of cultural memory.

Jan Váně in “The influence of the Catholic Church in the border regions: Comparing Silesia and Western Bohemia” concentrates on the role the Catholic Church plays in the Czech Republic and on the influence it exercises in this country. The author compares two regions (the Moravia-Silesia Region and West Bohemia) in which the Catholic Church has a very different position and draws a comparison among publicly-accessible socio-demographic data on the targeted regions with the Acts of Spiritual Administration data collected in the Czech Catholic Church database. He compares the Pilsen and Ostrava-Opava dioceses, which overlap with the selected regions. Since uninterrupted 1997–2009 data series were available for these regions, it is possible to forecast what position the Church will hold in the compared regions in the future.

Jan Kalenda in a paper “State formation on periphery: Precarious state building in Silesia” deals with the question of origins and consequences of state building on the periphery of the Bohemian lands between 10th and 17th century. The text primarily focuses on the key aspects of state formation activities in the area of Silesia and compares these elements with the character of state-making activities in the centre of the Czech kingdom. It also asserts that state making in the Silesia has many autonomous aspects that result from different kinds of cultural, political, and economic backgrounds (institutions), as well as from specific relations between the state administrative centre and local state agents.

Daniel Topinka in “Ethno-national paradox: The case of Hlučín area” deals with the autochthonous inhabitants of the Hlučín area district and focuses on changes in the national identity formation among generations of the Hlučín people. During three centuries, the inhabitants of the Hlučín area were exposed to ethno-national paradox. They faced the overlay of national projects that created changeable situations and similar social reality, where the social categories of unlikeness were intensively formed. The ideology of nationalism in the 19th century formed the destiny of local inhabitants. While the ethnic identities enabled a compatibility with Czech nationalism and the affiliation to the substantial Czech tribe, the national identities kept the orientation to German culture and thought during the 20th century. Today, in the period of deconstruction of nationalism, these identities do not play such an important role as they did in the past.

Helena Kubátová in “Changing life situations of Silesians in Hlučín region” points out the uniqueness of the Silesian region of Hlučín and identifies the changing life situations of its inhabitants as perceived by themselves. The text contains basic statistical data concerning the region, a concise outline of its history and an analysis of non-standardized interviews with the region’s native inhabitants. The analysis is based on the changes in four topic areas which form the notion of life situations: the uniqueness of the region and its inhabitants, working life, family life and public life. Most of the changes were caused by general modernization and civilization trends in modern societies. The disruption of generational continuity as a consequence of the post-Second World War trauma is a specific cause limited to Hlučín region. Although the region is losing its uniqueness, it is still worth studying as it cherishes values and lifestyles that have completely vanished elsewhere.

The proposed topics show the possible viewpoints from which we can observe and compare the events in the two societies. The reader has the opportunity to become familiar with different views of sociologists on similar topics and observe the changing shape of both contemporary societies. It may prove important not only for our present, but for our future as well.

Urszula Swadźba, Daniel Topinka

Notes about Contributors

Adam Bartoszek – Professor, PhD. Associate Professor at the University of Silesia in Katowice and Katowice School of Economics. A graduate of the Institute of Sociology at the University of Silesia, where he obtained his PhD in 1989 and an assistant professor of sociology in 2004. His scientific output consists of publications within the range of sociology of organization and management, the theory of social structures, social problems of city, research on social and cultural capitals, regional identity and social personality, methodology of marketing and public opinion research. He is an author and co-author of ten books, including such titles as: Społeczne tworzenie osobowości. Zarys socjologicznych teorii osobowości [Social Creation of Personality. The Outline of Sociological Theories of Personality] (Katowice, 2009; translated into Ukrainian and published in Kiev in 2010); together with L.A. Gruszczyński and M.S. Szczepański: Miasto i mieszkanie w społecznej świadomości. Katowiczanie o Katowicach [City and Habitation in Social Consciousness] (Katowice, 1997); Kapitał-społeczno kulturowy młodej inteligencji wobec wymogów rynku [The Social-Cultural Capital of Young Intelligentsia towards the Demands of the Market] (Katowice, 2003); together with T. Nawrocki and J. Kijonka-Niezabitowska: Tożsamość młodych Ślązaków. Między patriotyzmem lokalnym a europejskością [The Identity of the Young Silesians. Between Locality and Europeanism] (Katowice, 2009).

Andrzej Górny – PhD in sociology. An Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology of Knowledge at the Institute of Sociology, University of Silesia. Author of a doctoral dissertation on the religiousness of Silesian youth. He is interested in issues of transformation of contemporary social reality, especially in terms of culture. He is an author of scientific publications in journals such as Socjologia religii, Górnośląskie Studia Socjologiczne, Societas Communitas and many others. He has participated in numerous research projects (including international) aimed both at the cognitive goals and solving specific social problems. The most important professional experiences include participation in the following areas: working within the international research team in the project Modern Family in Transition (in cooperation with the universities of the Visegrad Group countries: the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Hungary, Poland), a nationwide project Twins or Rivals? aimed at understanding the specificity of cooperation between district labour and social welfare centres, and the project Crossing the Threshold aimed at social and professional activation of impaired vision and blind people.

Kinga Hoffmann – PhD in sociology. She works at the University of Economics in Katowice (the Faculty of Management, Institute of Human Resources Management). As a graduate of the University of Economics she gained a PhD title at the University of Wrocław. Her PhD dissertation concerned the meaning of work in young Silesian women's lives. She is an author of thirteen articles regarding her interests, such as: working Silesian women, women's careers and work as a value. As far as human resources management is concerned, the author addresses a question of measuring an effectiveness of HRM programmes.

Jan Kalenda – MA in sociology and personal management at the Faculty of Arts, Palacký University, Olomouc. During his studies he took a study tour on the Uppsala University in Sweden and the Aarhus University in Denmark. Nowadays he is a doctoral student of sociology at the Palacký University, Olomouc. Author mainly focuses on the problematics of historical sociology, especially on the question of the state building in European history, and also investigates long-term changes in cultural (ideological and religion) patterns. He published several articles in Czech and Slovakian social research journals, for example: Sociológia, Mezinárodní vztahy, Historická sociologie or Historica Olumucensia.

Helena Kubátová – PhD in sociology, methodology of sociology and sociology of lifestyle at the Faculty of Arts, Palacký University, Olomouc. She has published several monographs on the issue: The Methodology of Sociology (2006), Sociology (2008), Sociology of Lifestyle (2010). She has also published a scientific monograph focusing on the possibilities of linking phenomenology and social stratification: The Living World and Social Worlds (2008). A contributor of monographs concerning sociological theory: Pierre Bourdieu and the Theory of Symbolic Change (2008), Differentiation and Collective Behaviour: J. Alexander and P. Colomy on Neo-functionalism (2007, coedited), Value Cultural Pattern in Talcott Parsons's Theory in the Context of Ways of Solving the Issue of Linking the Individual and the Society (2006), Narrated Biographies of Three Historical Generations of Women (2005), Alfred Schütz's Phenomenological Sociology (2002). The author also focuses on the transformations of the Czech society after 1989 and published a paper entitled "Value aspects versus attitudes. A cultural transformation of the Czech society on the background of the economic and political transformation" (2005).

Dušan Lužný – Professor, PhD. A graduate in sociology at the Faculty of Arts, Masaryk University, Brno, where he also defended his doctoral thesis in 1996. He gained his habilitation in philosophy at the Palacký University, Olomouc in 2001. In his dissertation he tackled the role of religions in the modern society. Currently he works at the Department of Sociology and Andragogy of the Philosophical Faculty, Palacký University, Olomouc holding the post of the Department's Head. He is the author of several books on the sociology of religion. His main research interests are theory of sociology of religion, new religious movements, contemporary religious situation and globalization.

Urszula Swadźba – Professor, PhD. Associate Professor at the University of Silesia and Head of the Department of General Sociology. She completed her sociological studies at the Jagiellonian University and did her PhD and habilitation at the University of Silesia. Among her research interests are: sociology of values (family, religion and especially the value of work); sociology of the borderlands, sociology of local communities, the issue of Silesia. An author of dozens of articles on this subject. Her main publications are: Śląski etos pracy. Studium socjologiczne [Silesian Work Ethos. Sociological Study]. Katowice, 2001 and Obraz Niemców w oczach młodzieży pogranicza kulturowego... [The Image of Germans in the Eyes of the Youth in the Cultural Borderland...] (Katowice and Opole, 2007). She edited the book Praca, rodzina, obowiązki, czas wolny – czyli o stylu życia mieszkańców Rybnika [Work, Family, Duties, Leisure: On a Lifestyles of Rybnik Inhabitants] (Katowice, 2007), Śląski świat wartości [Silesian World of Values] (Katowice, 2008), Praca czy rodzina? Dylematy kobiet śląskich [Work or Family? The Dilemmas of Silesian Women] (Katowice, 2009), and together with E. Burzyńska Rodzina i praca. Między tradycją i współczesnością [Family and Work, Between Tradition and Contemporarity] (Katowice, 2010).

Daniel Topinka – PhD in sociology. He studied sociology and religion science at the Masaryk University in Brno. His doctoral dissertation concerned the integration of Muslims into the Czech society. The author works as an expert assistant in the Cabinet of Intercultural Studies at the Department of Sociology and Andragogy of the Philosophical Faculty at the Palacký University in Olomouc. An assistant lecturer of courses such as: sociology of migration, introduction to the migration theory, sociology of religion, cross-disciplinary seminar and theory of globalization. Among the research problems he undertakes are: social inclusion of minorities, sociology of migration, integration of the migrating and ethnical groups and sociology of religion. He published several articles concerning the topics in e.g. Sociální práce and Sociální studia, Acta Universitatis Palackianae Olomucensis, Problems of Education in the 21st century. In Poland he published a paper “The client’s system in the Czech labour market: Brokers, immigrants and employers” Immigration Policies and Security, ed. by K. Iglicka. (Warszawa, 2006).

Jan Váně – PhD in philosophy. He works at the Faculty of Arts, Philosophy and Study of Religion at the Masaryk University in Brno, where he obtained his PhD. During his doctoral studies, he also attended the Leibniz Universität in Hannover. He is a senior researcher in the Department of Sociology, University of West Bohemia in Pilsen. He concentrates on comparative research and his main interests include sociology of religion, social theory and political philosophy. Focused on qualitative research, an inherent part of his research focus is studying individualization processes and their impact on manifestations and forms of religiousness. Jan Váně has been developing his practical experience in empirical research. Presently, he is the solver of a grant of the Czech Grant Association Adaptace a etablování neinstitutionalizovaných náboženských společenstev ve veřejném prostoru [Adaptation and Presentation of Non-institutionalized Religious Groups in Public Space]. He has published several academic papers (e.g. “Where is the sociology of religion heading. Some comments to three European sociologies of religion” in Czech Sociological review 2009) and participated in international conferences (ESA, ISORECEA, WAPOR, etc.).

Monika Źak – MA in sociology. She works in the Department of General Sociology, Institute of Sociology, University of Silesia, Katowice. Her research interests are related to the functioning of selected groups of disposable, high-risk professions, the issue of professional ethics of chosen professions, as well as to the broader problems of the contemporary family. Among others she published articles concerning the following themes: “Doctors’ attitudes of using the medical ethic’s norms”; “TV, bike or maybe a book? How people spend their leisure time in Rybnik?”; “Consumption and consumerism? Residents of Rybnik a new style of life”; “Rybnik – tradition and modernity.” She actively participates in national and international scientific conferences concerning the subject of her interests.